The Shadows - synopsis

In this Phillip Banks conspiracy thriller we are offered a glimpse into the world of private banking and the plans and motivations of those who rule the world: The Shadows.

'IAN FLEMING' MEETS 'HOUSE OF CARDS' A BOOK ABOUT POWER – WHAT ARE THEY PLANNING?

Now forty and a rising star in one of London's oldest banks, Phillip Banks is tasked with the acquisition of a Swiss pharmaceutical firm. He flies to Zurich to meet the owner, Milo, a man fascinated by butterflies and their ability to predict the future. Milo isn't interested in selling his firm and Banks is forced to consider what he needs to do to gain control.

Meanwhile he is told to take a wife, if he wishes to progress deeper into the elusive sect of the Varangian Guard. He is a confirmed bachelor until he meets with his best friend's fiancée – a raven-haired beauty called Zara.

As Banks travels far and wide, from Arctic Norway to the deserts of Saudi Arabia, he contrives expert plots to achieve his ends, but how well does he know himself?

In this cautionary tale of the not too distant future Robert Salisbury draws into question The Shadows and their right to anonymity.

'Our aim is the creation of a highly talented but helplessly dependent population.'
[Varangian Code]

'He who breathes freedom shall inherit the lungs of a slave'
[Lord Martin]
